9

Literary Genre: The Nature of the New Testament Books

- The type of artistic work characterized by its expected style, form, and content
- It dictates the rules the author intended the reader to adopt in interpreting it.
- If the writer intended the piece to be a figure of speech, then the reader would misinterpret them if they believed the genre was literal
- A book of one genre may contain several other types of genres

10

An apocalypse is prophetic revelation often in a form of vivid and frightening dream or vision full of coded symbolic messages which come in times of national crisis to stir and steer hope in believers but fear and warning of judgement to unbelievers

It comes in times of crisis, and it serves the dual purpose of bringing hope to believers in crisis & warnings to unbelievers

Revelation = Prophecy + Apocalyptic + Epistles

Historical understanding of how Roman language and culture merged with the Greek and Aramaic culture is relevant for interpreting the New Testament

Implications of Latinisms in Mark's Gospel

- Some scholars argue that the phenomenon is strong evidentiary support of the Patristic tradition that Mark wrote his Gospel in Rome with persecuted Roman Christians in mind based on his memoirs of Peter's stories and preaching
- Other scholars point out that most of the Latinized Greek words in Mark were those associated with the Roman military, economic and administrative establishment that was commonly employed in the provinces. Accordingly, they argue that the Latinisms reflect the writing of the Gospel in Palestine, most likely in Galilean Capernaum or even near Caesarea
- My view is in-between. Markan Latinisms reflect more on the author rather than his location. He was a Jewish Hellenized and Romanized author with direct access to the primary eye-witness accounts of Jesus' ministry in Palestine like Peter and other Galileans. John Mark was precisely such a person (Acts 12:12)

Historical Methodology: How do we do history?

- Objective of historiography:

- General Philosophy: Ascertain the lives of the people, their relationships, their worldviews, and the social and cultural trends and events, with the aim of attributing relationships, and/or correlations and/or causality that explain them.
- Specific Objective: Using the New Testament as window to explain the manner in which first century Graeco-Roman Empire interacted with Christianity.

- Historical Procedure:

- Grammatical Exegesis of New Testament passage
- Determine the relevant primary Graeco-Roman historical sources
- Ascertain the background of key Graeco-Roman lexicons, idioms, and concepts
- Socio-historical analysis of New Testament passage
- Evaluate and contextualize the contribution of background to analysis of passage

Larry Helyer

“[The Second Temple Jewish Literature] are now viewed as a valuable supplement for understanding our canonical Christian Scriptures. This is not to deny the essential point of the Reformed standards, namely nothing outside the canonical books adds anything necessary for faith and practice. Still, there is much in the NT that can only be fully understood when seen in light of its larger Second Temple setting, and this includes theological and ethical matters. In my opinion, a full-orbed theology of the NT is not possible without the input deriving from the world of Second Temple Judaism; too many nuances in the canonical Scriptures escape us without this valuable context”

Helyer, Larry R. “The Necessity, Problems, And Promise Of Second Temple Judaism For Discussions Of New Testament Eschatology.” Journal of Evangelical Theological Society 47, no. 4 (December 2004): 597–615. Pages 600-601

27

Two Potential Errors in Using Literary Evidence

• Parallelomania

- Premature attribution of literary dependence due to similarities or parallels
- Frey 2014:210 – “The task is no more simply collecting parallels, nor determining literary dependence, but rather contextualizing texts by means of other texts, putting them in perspective, and reconstructing discourses not only between Jews and Jesus-followers, but rather within a wider Jewish framework in which the early Christian tradition emerged”

• Anachronism

- Retrospectively reading contemporary or later ideas back into historical documents because of same or similar terminologies.
- Reading modern trans-Atlantic American slavery back into slavery of Biblical times

“Now there is in Jerusalem near the Sheep Gate a pool, which in Aramaic is called Bethesda and which is surrounded by five covered colonnades. Here a great number of disabled people used to lie – the blind, the lame, the paralysed.”

John 5:2-4

31

Archeological confirmations of geographical and historical details of John 5 have revised discussions regarding earlier dating of writing of John's Gospel

Moreover, these discoveries have shown that first century Jerusalem was thoroughly Romanized, and the temple itself bore significant Hellenistic-Roman features that requires our revision of perceptions of its culture

The Distinctive Roman Ethos

“We have excelled neither Spain in population, nor Gaul in vigour, nor Carthage in versatility, nor Greece in art, nor, indeed Italy and Latium itself in the innate sensibility characteristic of this land and its peoples, but in piety, in devotion to religion, ... we have excelled every race and every nation.”

- Both were also associated with significant persecution

42

Acts 17:6b:

“These who have turned the world upside down have come here too” (NKJV)

The Thessalonians, having joined the losing side in the Octavian vs. Brutus war, from then on became highly sensitive to any impression of disruption of the peace fearing it would be wrongly interpreted by the Romans. In addition to becoming sycophantic to Rome, they took over-the-top measures to prevent any incident giving perception of enthusiasm for anything that would not be regarded as full support for empire.
